

Michelle Watson is a gifted editor, writer, and speaker. She has a passion for developing the written and spoken word in order to help authors and professionals reach their audiences more effectively.

Michelle's love for language began with her first grade class's spelling bees. From there, she grew to love grammar, as she learned how to diagram and properly arrange sentences. By seventh grade, she had developed such a reputation for excellence in grammar and spelling that she was grading papers for her language arts teacher.

After graduating from the Administrative Assistant certification program at Advanced Career Training in Atlanta, Michelle went on to spend the next 20 years as an administrative and personal assistant to several companies and non-profit organizations. No matter the position Michelle has found herself in, she has always been a writer and editor for everything from letters to pamphlets to employee manuals. The first company she founded, Fortunatas Business Services, provided writing and typing services for teachers, professors, students, authors, and playwrights.

Michelle received her BA in Communication Studies at Regent University in 2012. While in school, she developed a special interest in corporate culture communication from the customer's point of view. She was able to conduct observations that revealed how organizations' cultures, company staff, and ministry volunteers either attract or repel customers and church visitors.

Michelle founded Topflight Communication in April 2015 to follow her lifelong dream of becoming an editor and publisher. Within one year the company was incorporated, and Michelle became the President and CEO of Topflight Communication, Inc. Even in her new role, she is a trusted book doctor who works hard to ensure her clients' books and publications are top-quality.

In November 2015, Michelle joined the writing staff at Our Town Gwinnett, where she writes feature articles about local businesses and organizations.

Today, Michelle inspires others as a sought-after speaker. Her topics of interest include Christian Inspiration, Overcoming Obstacles, Personal Empowerment, and Self-Editing Techniques.

Michelle and her husband live in Snellville, Georgia, approximately 30 miles outside of Atlanta. They have one daughter and one granddaughter.
